the two-year college in the United States

MADE IN AMERICA

Most historians consider the two-year college, often called junior and/or community college, as perhaps the only institution of higher education that can be described as "made in America." Most other types of colleges and universities in the United States were patterned after institutions of higher education in other countries, but the two-year college had its genesis in this country around the turn of the twentieth century.

Young people and adults interested in coming to the United States for college studies may find many rewarding opportunities in these distinctively American institutions. Their programs are varied, often providing education and training experiences not found in other types of schools. Two-year colleges are located in major urban centers, in smaller cities, and in rural areas. They come in all sizes, but they are organized to give individual attention to the students they serve.

Because of the variety of students who choose two-year institutions, the colleges give special attention to guidance and counseling. Student personnel workers are responsible for helping students make the right study choices and helping them succeed in their choices. Personal problems, such as those having to do with finances, social adjustment, and housing, are also given attention.

In selecting a two-year college, the student should make certain that the school he chooses is accredited or properly recognized. This is just as important for the two-year college as for the four-year institution. Proper accreditation and recognition means that the institution meets standards of quality prescribed by evaluating agencies in various regions and states. (This booklet contains a listing of all two-year colleges accredited by regional or state accrediting agencies.)

More extensive information on each junior college may be found in American Junior Colleges, seventh edition, edited by Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., and published in 1967 by the American Council on Education, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036 ($12.00). Another useful reference book is the Handbook on International Study, published by the Institute of International Education, 809 United Nations Plaza, New York, New York 10017, ($3.50). These books are usually available at United States Information Service centers and libraries and American embassies.

A foreign student may find it helpful to examine the catalogues published by two-year colleges. The catalogue gives an account of the history, organization, surroundings, faculty, courses, tuition fees, living expenses, and admissions procedures of the school. These catalogues may often be found in the United States Information Service libraries abroad. A student may also write directly to the college in which he is interested, asking for a copy of the catalogue.

JUNIOR COLLEGE OPPORTUNITIES

There are some 800 two-year colleges in the U.S. now, and new ones are being established each year. This expansion grows out of a national concern to make the opportunity for at least two years of education beyond high school available to everyone.

When the first two-year colleges were established in the early 1900's, their function was considered primarily to provide the first two years of a traditional university program. The junior college student, it was expected, would eventually complete his work in a four-year college or a university.

This preparation for transfer continues to be a major activity for junior colleges, particularly as universities raise undergraduate admissions requirements and give more and more attention to graduate studies and research. The junior college is expected to serve as an important bridge between high school and the university for many Americans.

A majority of the junior colleges now perform a second vital function of equal importance. They provide education and training in two years or less that will lead young people to rewarding technical and semi-professional jobs in business, industry, and government. These jobs, important to economic growth, require new skills as a result of new scientific and technological developments which have made obsolete the unskilled and semi-skilled jobs of the recent past. Other countries are experiencing similar changes in manpower needs.

Education and training opportunities are available in a wide range of fields: among them, health technology, aerospace industry, data processing and computer operations, electronics, industrial and civil engineering technology, police and fire protection, agricultural technology, mechanical service, office and business supervision, and laboratory technology and assistance.

The jobs available in these fields both in the United States and abroad are rewarding in terms of salaries and work environments. They are positions in which one supports the professional engineers, the doctors, the scientists, and other specialists.

There is a growing demand throughout the world for well-qualified men and women who can fill these vital positions. The demand is likely to increase in line with technological and scientific progress.

Types of Colleges

Not all of the two-year colleges offer the broad range of programs cited above. The foreign student should study catalogues and other informational materials carefully before selecting an institution. There are various types of two-year colleges. There are, for example, about 175 church-related junior colleges in the U.S. Most of them have facilities allowing the student to live at the college. They have living space available to foreign students and welcome them to their campuses. Although these institutions are connected with specific religious groups, they do not require that their foreign students be of that religion.

The second type is the independent junior college, which offers programs designed to meet individual needs of its students. In general, the income for these independent schools comes principally from fees, endowment, and gifts from alumni and friends.

Both church-related and independent colleges tend to emphasize liberal arts and general education programs leading to transfer to the last two years of a four year college. Few offer large-scale technical and semi-professional education programs.

Such programs may be found in the third type of two-year college, most often known as the community college. The community college is enjoying explosive growth at present—with some 500 institutions in operation. These colleges are sponsored and supported by the communities in which they are located. They try to meet the needs and interests of a wide range of students.

Few community colleges provide living accommodations, but they will help the foreign student find housing. Other advantages these colleges offer foreign students include low tuition and fees and well-organized counseling and guidance services to assist them in study choices and other matters.

Instruction

The principal methods of teaching in the two-year college are lectures supplemented by reading, classroom discussions, and individual meetings between the student and the professor. The professor assigns reading from books, some of which the student must purchase and some of which may be found in the college library. Class periods are devoted to letures or discussions about the material in the prescribed reading. Scientific subjects, creative arts, and technical and semi-professional instruction include laboratory work.

Students are required to make frequent oral or written reports on their reading and on independent study projects. In addition, written examinations are often given at the beginning or end of each class period. These are called "quizzes" and cover the work of the preceding day. The type and number of examinations are determined by the instructor, but all professors give more extensive examinations at the middle and end of each term. The quality of the student's work is indicated by grades based on examinations, papers he or she has written, and classroom performance.

The faculty member of the two-year college is not ordinarily engaged in advanced research—though research is encouraged. Rather, he is selected for his competence as a teacher. A two-year college professor, therefore, may have the time and ability to counsel his foreign students individually and help them through language or personal adjustment difficulties.

Regular class attendance is obligatory for all students. U.S. immigration regulations require those from overseas to pursue a minimum program of study whether or not they are degree candidates. This means that the student must be in full-time attendance for the academic year and must complete certain units of study. The foreign student is expected to be present at the college during the entire academic year. The academic year ranges from 32 to 36 weeks in length. It usually begins in September and ends in late May or early June. Some two-year colleges divide the academic year into two periods of about 18 weeks each; these periods are called semesters. Other schools divide the year into periods of 12 weeks each, called quarters. Students must be present during the three quarters that fall between September and June; the fourth quarter is the summer vacation. At all two-year colleges, there is a holiday in December, usually two weeks in length, and at most schools there is also a one-week spring holiday.

In most two-year colleges, the program of study is measured by a system of hours, points, or credits. Each course which the student takes is valued at a certain number of hours, points, or credits. For example, a course which lasts for one semester or quarter and consists of three one-hour class periods per week is valued at three hours, points, or credits. A student is normally expected to earn 30 points in each academic year.

Degrees

The student who satisfactorily completes the two-year course of study is awarded the degree of Associate in Arts (A.A.) or Associate in Science (A.S.). The A.S. is awarded to students who specialize in scientific or technical subjects. These degrees are certificates of achievement intermediate between a high school diploma and a four-year college degree of Bachelor of Arts (B.A. or A.B.) or Bachelor of Science (B.S.). To qualify for an A.A. or A.S., a student must generally meet the following requirements: complete the two-year course with the specified number of points, hours, or credits; take all of the courses which the school requires and comply with special requirements (such as reading knowledge of a specified language or physical education qualifications); and maintain a satisfactory standard of academic work.

Many students from other countries who study at two-year colleges do not choose to become candidates for a degree. They may want to take only the courses which will prepare them for a four-year college program, or they may wish only to gain college experience. Many two-year colleges will award a special certificate to the foreign student indicating which studies he has completed successfully.

Student Life

Social life varies considerably from one two-year college to another. Community colleges, independent, and church-related schools all have "extracurricular activities." Such activities are essential parts of the experiences of every foreign student who comes to the U.S. campus.

In some two-year colleges, life outside the classroom, including an extensive sports program, is considered an important element in the educational process. On each campus there is usually a student government which represents all students. Students may join groups concerned with music, drama, debating, languages, international relations, or other special interests. These organizations are open to everyone and give the foreign student an opportunity to get to know American students on a more personal and informal basis.

Life in the church-related and independent two-year college is centered in the area of the college buildings. This area is known as the campus. In a great many of these colleges, the students live on the campus in dormitories. Most foreign students attending residential colleges live in dormitories with American students. However, those attending community or other two-year colleges frequently must make arrangements either to live with a family or to rent housing accommodations near the campus.

Living with an American family can be a wholesome experience for the foreign student. But attending a community college does present housing problems for the student from abroad, and he or she should seek advice and plan in advance for an appropriate place to live. Usually the college can help.

Admission

The students should study thoroughly the catalogues of each type of two-year college and of several four-year colleges before deciding where to apply. After selecting several colleges, the student should begin to seek admission at least 12 months before the beginning of the academic year when he hopes to enter school. Few two-year colleges reserve places for foreign students, and it may often be difficult to obtain admission because of the large number of American applicants.

It is vital that the foreign student be able to read, write, speak, and understand English. While the student may take specialized language training after arriving in the United States, it is far more important to have a mastery of the language before entering the country and the college. Such proficiency will insure enjoyment of the U.S. experience and will eliminate difficult obstacles to study and rapport with Americans at the outset.

The foreign student must prove that he has completed his education to a level equivalent to the secondary school in the U.S. (usually 12 years of schooling). When the student has decided upon a college, he should write to that institution's Admissions Office for an application form. The college will send the form and explain to the applicant what academic records the student should return with the application. After submitting his application and credentials to a two-year college, the foreign applicant should allow considerable time for a reply. If he is seeking admission in September, he may expect to be notified some time between February and May. Since the student may not be accepted by the first school to which he applies, it is often wise to apply to two or three colleges at the same time.

Since there is no uniform standard which would be accepted by all two-year colleges, each applicant's record is checked against the educational standards of the individual college. There are three factors upon which evaluation is always based: the student's educational objectives, the requirements of the particular institution, and the applicability of his record to the studies he wishes to pursue.

These factors are considered by the admissions committee of the two-year college. The more information the committee has about the applicant, the better able it will be to evaluate his or her application.

Costs

The most important elements in the student's expenses are the costs for tuition, board, and lodging. In church-related and independent two-year colleges, these charges are made directly by the college and vary considerably. The cost of room, board, tuition and general fees for one academic year may range from $900 to $3,500, depending on the school and the section of the country in which it is located.

At community colleges, tuition and general fees vary from free tuition to $350 for an academic year, with the average yearly tuition between $200 and $250. However, the foreign student must arrange for, and pay for, his own room and board. This may be expensive in some areas. A student should check with the college before making any definite living arrangements.

Detailed information on tuition and living expenses is given in the catalogue of each two-year college. The foreign student must also arrange to cover his expenses for books, vacations, and summer travel as well as for travel expenses between his home country and the U.S. and between his port of entry and the college. Travel is expensive in the U.S. The student should be certain he has sufficient funds.

The foreign student must be assured of adequate financial support during his stay in the United States. It is very difficult for students from abroad to obtain paid employment. Permission must be obtained from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. Earnings from any employment are subject to U.S. income taxes.

Financial Assistance

There are a number of scholarships, fellowships, and other forms of financial assistance available for foreign students at American two-year colleges. Foreign students may consult certain books for information on awards offered by American colleges and universities. Study Abroad, published by Unesco (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) contains a partial list of awards offered to foreign students by American academic institutions as well as by public and private agencies. This book may be obtained from Unesco, 10 Avenue Kleber, Paris 16, France, for $4.00, 20 N.F. or 500 fr., or from Unesco Publications Center, 317 East 34th Street, New York, N. Y., U.S.A., for $4.00.

The Handbook on International Study, published by the Institute on International Education (see page i), contains a list of current awards open to foreign students for study in the U.S.

These two references are available at many United States Information Centers and Libraries (and American embassies and consulates). A Cultural Affairs Officer of the American embassy or U.S.I.S. can often be helpful to a student interested in study opportunities in the U.S. There are also privately maintained centers which provide library and counseling services and give help in securing admission to U.S. colleges. Such centers do not charge for their services. The Institute of International Education (IIE), which has its headquarters in New York City, maintains overseas branches:

East African Office
P. O. Box 5869
Nairobi, Kenya

(Serves Ethiopia, Kenya, Malawi, Rhodesia, Tanzania, Uganda, and Zambia).

The American-Korean Foundation (345 East 46 Street, New York, New York 10017) has an Educational Counseling Center in Seoul, 90-1 Choong-Jong Ro 1-Ka, Suhdaemoon-Ku. The center has a collection of U.S. catalogues and bulletins, provides tests for English proficiency, and forwards applications to U.S. institutions.

In Scandinavia, assistance is provided by the following agencies which have a cooperative relationship with the American-Scandinavian Foundation in the United States (127 East 73 Street, New York, New York 10021):

The Denmark-America Foundation
Nytorv 9
Copenhagen, Denmark

The Finnish-American Society

Oslo, Norway

The Sweden-American Foundation
Grevturegatan 14
Stockholm, Sweden

In India, counseling services, information on scholarships and fellowships, and English testing are provided by the United States Educational Foundation (USEFI), 12 Hailey Road, New Delhi.

Perhaps the largest single sponsor of awards for study in the U.S.A. is the U.S. Government acting under the Fulbright-Hays Act exchange programs. However, these awards are primarily for graduate rather than undergraduate students.

Visa Requirements

Since it may take time to obtain a visa, it is wise to inquire as early as possible at the nearest U.S. embassy, consulate, or legation regarding the requirements for the visa.

Under the U.S. immigration regulations, a student's passport must be valid for at least six months beyond the time for which he is given permission to stay in the U.S.A.

It is important that you inquire at an early stage about visa regulations from the Visa Section of the American Embassy or Consulate. Students and scholars generally come under the Temporary Visa Classification, Exchange Visitor (EX) or Student (F).

Foreign students are also required to be covered by an accident insurance policy payable in the United States. The Institute of International Education, together with an insurance company, has worked out a special accident and sickness insurance plan for foreign students, teachers, and trainees. Information can be obtained from William H. Gray Co., Inc., 70 Pine Street, New York, New York 10005.

ARRIVAL IN THE U.S.

Any student from abroad who arrives at a major port and wishes to be met there should write to the International Student Service (formerly the Committee on Friendly Relations Among Foreign Students):

291 Broadway
New York, New York 10007

55 Grant Avenue
San Francisco, California 94108

4050 Wilshire Boulevard
Los Angeles, California 90005

giving his date of arrival and name of ship or airline and flight number. A representative, wearing a blue arm band with white lettering "Foreign Student Adviser," will be on hand to meet the student. The representative will help the student through customs and help in finding temporary housing or making travel arrangements.

The Travelers Aid Society also has representatives at the steamship piers, airports, and large railway and bus stations. A foreign student should not hesitate to ask the advice of the representatives of these organizations. They are eager to be of service. Neither organization charges any money for its services.

All persons, upon arrival in the U.S., are required to undergo inspection by Public Health, Immigration, and Custom officials. If the papers (health certificate, passport, etc.) are in order, the traveler will be allowed to continue his journey. Should there be any change in his travel plans, a foreign student should notify college officials immediately.

When a student arrives in the U.S., he should have about $50 in U.S. currency and the rest of his money in traveler's checks.

If the student has not made arrangements in advance for a hotel room, a good place to stay is the YMCA or YWCA (Young Men's or Young Women's Christian Association). The addresses are given in the local telephone directory. These Associations offer accommodations to non-Christians as well as to Christians.

Arrival at College

As soon as possible after arriving on the campus, the student from overseas should present himself at the office of the Foreign Student Adviser, whose special responsibility is to work with students from other lands in their educational and social adjustment. If there is no Foreign Student Adviser, the arriving student should report to the office of the Dean of Students, who is responsible for the social welfare and conduct of the students. There the student will receive whatever advice he needs and will be told how to register for the courses of study he wishes to take. He should then register with the appropriate administrative offices at the time specified.

In most cases, the foreign student should plan to arrive at the school at the time specified for all new students. Most colleges have an orientation period before classes begin to help acquaint the new students with the college. Overseas students will find this a helpful introduction to their period of study.

APPENDIX

The following list includes accredited two-year colleges in the United States. The great majority are members of the American Association of Junior Colleges. Information on type of control and composition of the student body is taken from the 1966 Junior College Directory, published by the American Association of Junior Colleges. The Education Directory, 1966-67, Part III, Higher Education, published by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, was also consulted for some information on types of control. Enrollment figures were obtained from the AAJC's 1966 Junior College Directory and include only the students in full-time attendance. The notation on living facilities was taken from American Junior Colleges 1966, published by the American Council on Education. Information on the number of foreign students is taken from Open Doors 1966, published by the Institute of International Education.

The following designations are used:

Pub. — controlled by municipal, county, state, territorial, district, or federal government (Public).
Priv. — controlled by private corporation, independent of church.
Prot. — controlled by a Protestant denomination.
R.C. — controlled by the Roman Catholic Church.
men — student body composed of men women — student body composed of women coed. — student body composed of men and women.
l.f. — living facilities available.

(The number immediately following the name of each city is the U.S. postal Zip Code number. Write it on the envelope—after the name of the college, city, and state—to speed your correspondence with these institutions.)

In the information listings, the first of the figures given for each institution represents the total number of full-time students enrolled. The second figure, in parentheses, represents the number of foreign students enrolled.
